Hopi Ear Candles

They are all-natural products comprising a 20cm hollow tube with a filter at one end, with a burning length of about 14cm. They are constructed of organically grown flax, honey extracts, beeswax, and powdered, organically grown therapeutic herbs, including chamomile, sage and hypericum (St. Johns Wort) as used by the Hopi Indians.

Flax: Blue flowered plant cultivated for its textile fibres and seeds. The fibres are spun into linen cloth which forms the tube of the candle.

Honey: Sugars in the honey inhibit bacterial growth. It also contains small amounts of beneficial minerals which aid the healing process.

Beeswax: The main combustible component of the candle but also acts as a binding agent for the other ingredients. Beta-Carotene: A yellow/orange anti-oxidant pigment found in foods such as carrots, apricots and mangoes. It is used primarily to colour the candles.

Chamomile: A herb with soothing, calming, anti-inflammatory, disinfectant and vaso-constrictive properties. It is valuable for use where skin is red, sensitive, dry, itchy or flaky, conditions often associated with ear problems. Sage: A warming herb used by the Native American Indians to clear negative energies and create sacred space. It has long been used in folk medicines for mouth and throat infections. It helps to reduce muscle hyper-tonicity. Hypericum: A herb (St. Johns Wort) with analgesic, anti-inflammatory and anti-septic properties. Also soothing to inflamed nerves. Filter Made from environmentally compatible poly-ethylene and manufactured in the form of the Indian Mother Earth symbol.
